

Appeal of United Linen Supply Company

states were greater and the property and payroll less than in California. The formula will, of course, allocate less income to any state in which the average of property, payroll and sales is less than in California. A demonstration of this fact cannot show that the formula is invalid.

The contention is made that the factors affecting income in the linen supply business are standardization, regularity of delivery, continuity of customers, usable life of linens and competition. The formula, however, need not incorporate every factor affecting income (El Dorado Oil Works v. McColgan, supra). It has not been established by competent proof that the factors of property, payroll and sales do not properly reflect the income,

It has also been argued by the Appellant that the business should not be considered unitary, at least for the years prior to 1949, We considered in our prior opinion all of the evidence then presented on this point and found that the business was unitary for the income years ended March 31, 1941 to March 31, 1951, inclusive. No additional evidence has been offered.
